ENDS HIS LIFE

Man Separated from His Wife Drinks Carbolic Acid in Street and Dies Soon Afterward.

While many persons were waiting for a trolley car at One Hundred and Fifieth street and Meirose avenue, in the Bronx, a man who was standing on the northwest corner of the streets raised bottle to his lips and swalloped the contents and sank to the pavement. A cumber of the witnesses of the deed and Patrolman Patrick, of the Morrisania station, who was on post at the corner. rushed to the man and found that he had taken carbolic acid.

An ambulance was summoned from Lebanon Hospital. Dr. Reiss, who responded to the call, found that the man was in a critical condition and hurried ilm to the hospital, where he died twenty-five minutes later.

twenty-five minutes later.

From letters in his pockets it was learned that he was Andreas Hammerell, of No. 718 East One Hundred and Thirty-fifth street. He appeared to have been about forty-five years old.

At the One Hundred and Thirty-fifth street address it was learned that Hammerell had been the janitor of the flathouse until a week ago, when he and his wife separated after many quarrels. The wife, it was said, had gone to live elsewhere.
